For the past year, Index on Censorship has been recording threats to media freedom in the European Union and candidate countries via its Mapping Media Freedom project. Since the mapping project was launched, over 760 reports — including 89 physical attacks on journalists — from across Europe have been verified and published.

Thirteen media workers have been killed in connection with their jobs. Journalists have been assaulted. Media workers have been threatened with death or bodily harm. Police and government officials have detained and interrogated reporters. Journalists have been burned in effigy, depicted as animals on billboards and subjected to online trolling. Newspaper articles have been spiked in opaque circumstances. Television programmes have been cancelled amid accusations of censorship. Extremist groups have attacked media offices while hackers have knocked news sites off the web.

This is the Europe chronicled by the reports published to Mapping Media Freedom — covering European Union member states and candidates for entry — between May 2014 and April 2015. Taken together, these reports show that far from being an isolated problem, press freedom and media professionals face mounting pressure across the continent.

While no country is immune from pressures on media professionals, the five countries with the most reports were EU candidate country Turkey (114), member state Hungary (93), candidate country Serbia (74), founding member state Italy (71) and founding member state Germany (48). The successor nations to the former Yugoslavia had a combined total of 174 incidents that were verified by correspondents attached to the project. The map, which was co-funded by the European Commission, launched publicly on 24 May 2014 in cooperation with Osservatorio Balcani e Caucaso and allows anyone — from members of the public to journalist unions — to submit reports for verification by Index’s eight part-time European Union correspondents.

“The truly frightening thing is that the current 762 reports represent ‘just the tip of the iceberg’, as one of our correspondents put it. More awareness among journalists about media violations is needed, but the reports point to the scale of the problem”, Index Senior Advocacy Officer Melody Patry said.
Mapping Media Freedom in Europe

Some of the violations against media reported between May 2014 and April 2015 at mediafreedom.ushahidi.com

While homicidal violence against journalists is the most drastic form of attack on free media, it is not the only one. (...) Media is subject to all nature of offences: criminal defamation laws that put reporters in jail for rooting out corruption in public places; cyber-attacks that plague internet media sites; new laws that are being adopted to criminalise free expression in the name of fighting terrorism; and increasing regulation of the internet in an effort by authoritarian governments to squelch media and free expression advocates.

Dunja Mijatovic, OSCE Representative on Freedom of the Media
29 April 2014, ‘The good fight must continue’, indexoncensorship.org
Countries with the most reports in 2014-2015

The 10 countries with the most incidents reported to mediafreedom. ushahidi.com as of April 21 2015. The project includes all European Union member states, candidate and potential candidates for entry. Cases cited are the most recent verified report for that country.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Country</th>
<th>Reports</th>
<th>Incident Details</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Turkey</td>
<td>114</td>
<td>Journalist and academic Osman Özsoy said on his Twitter account that he had been detained by counterterrorism police</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hungary</td>
<td>93</td>
<td>Miklós Borsa, a news anchor for Hungarian public television, was assaulted in the township of Balatonfüred</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Serbia</td>
<td>74</td>
<td>Photographer Senad Zupljanin was physically assaulted by a member of the Novi Pazar city council's security detail</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Italy</td>
<td>71</td>
<td>Sports journalist Matteo Spini was targeted with a banner, chants and threats in private messages and comments on social media</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Germany</td>
<td>48</td>
<td>The office building of the newspaper Die Leipziger Volkszeitung's (LVZ) regional bureau in Eilenburg, a small city near Leipzig, was vandalised</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>France</td>
<td>41</td>
<td>Journalist Simon Michel was attacked in Arles by bullfighting professionals while he was covering an anti-bullfighting protest</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Romania</td>
<td>39</td>
<td>Stelian Tanase, director of Romanian Public Television, wrote to the Romanian Intelligence Service requesting removal of undercover agents from his staff</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bosnia</td>
<td>30</td>
<td>News agency Patria was inaccessible for around 12 hours as a consequence of a hacker attack</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United Kingdom</td>
<td>29</td>
<td>More than 30 jobs have been made redundant or put at risk of redundancy by Newsquest</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Macedonia</td>
<td>25</td>
<td>Reporter and editor Borjan Jovanovski was sent a funeral wreath with “Final Greetings” written on it</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Case studies

Across Europe, censorship and media violations take different forms depending on the country. These four reports are expanded from incidents that were logged to the map.

Germany

Vandals lash out against local newspaper for reporting on right-wing extremists

“People like to make journalists their victims and to take revenge out on them. Usually, somebody does something bad and the journalist who uncovers that becomes the face of the issue.”

Lithuania

Russian language television network banned for “inciting discord”

“It is the first time in the history of the European Union that a regulatory body has taken the decision to take the whole channel completely off air.”

Montenegro

Journalist groups call impunity the biggest threat to media freedom

“Such an atmosphere of impunity threatens journalists in particular. If the state treats these attacks passively, it becomes responsible for the suppression of freedom of speech, the rule of law and democracy.”

Serbia

For Juzne Vesti editor, deteriorating media freedom comes as no surprise

“The language from the 90s is back in Serbia. Again, journalists that criticise the work of the government or are reporting on corruption are labelled as foreign mercenaries.”
Categorisation of violations

Reports can be filtered by the 51 different labels used to organise the incidents reported to mediafreedom.ushahidi.com

Legal measures

Censorship

Government threat

Incidents that involved the threat of or filing of legal actions

Incidents that included partial or complete censorship

Incidents that originated from a government representative or agency

mediafreedom.ushahidi.com

is a project of

Xindex

the voice of free expression

co-funded by the