(NATIONAL COALITION AGAINST THE MUSIC-MAKING BILL (KOALISI NASIONAL TOLAK RUU PERMUSIKAN))

Rejection of the Music-making Bill (RUU Permusikan)

Unnecessary and Potentially Repressive for Musicians

Jakarta, Sunday, 3 February 2019. We, the National Coalition Against the Music-making Bill and makers of Indonesian music, hereby assert our rejection of a proposed Bill targeting music-making and the music profession in Indonesia. After carefully reviewing the current draft bill, we assert that there is no reason for the urgency of the House of Representatives (DPR RI) or the Government to discuss and ratify this Bill to become Law. The contents of this Bill reflect many fundamental problems and misunderstandings that limit and obstruct the creative process and repress music workers. We continue to support efforts to improve the welfare of musicians and the formation of a better music industry ecosystem. But ratifying this bill is not the way.

The Draft Bill on Music-making contains several articles that are redundant with existing Indonesian laws, including the Intellectual Property Law, the Handover Law on Print and Recorded Works, and the Electronic Information and Transactions Law. More importantly, this Bill contradicts the Cultural Advancement Law, as well as Article 28 of the 1945 Constitution upholding freedom of expression in our democratic country. According to musician and songwriter Danilla Riyadi's, "Musicians' desire and right to profit from their work is already addressed by the Intellectual Property Protection Law and others that are better suited to protecting creativity; so what is the need for this Music-making Law?"

We have identified at least 19 Articles that are problematic. "[Problems include] the editorial obscurity and the tone of certain Articles, a lack of clarity on "who" or "what" is to be regulated, and the fundamental problem of violating freedom of expression in music," comments musician and songwriter Rara Sekar.

We reject this bill on the following grounds:

First, the Bill is full of "rubber articles" (pasal karet) that lack clear parameters or benchmarks. For example, as several musicians and the media have already charged, Article 5 contains sentences that are open to diverse interpretations and biases. An example is the prohibition on "confiscating, harassing, tarnish, and provoking." According to Cholil Mahmud of band Efek Rumah Kaca, "Rubber articles like this give the ruling group or anyone else the power to persecute any creative process they do not like." In addition, this Bill contradicts the spirit of the freedom of expression that defines democracy and is guaranteed by the 1945 Constitution of the Republic of Indonesia. "In this context, the Draft Bill violates both basic logic and constitutional ethics in our democratic country and has renewed the climate of the New Order as an authoritarian state,” comments musician, songwriter, and music director Jason Ranti.

Second, the bill marginalizes independent musicians and sides with big business. It contains an Article requiring the certification of music workers, which has the potential to disenfranchise musicians who are not in compliance. Article 10 also regulates the distribution of musical works. By forbidding musicians to distribute their work independently, the Article will likely negatively impact musicians—particularly independent creative workers. According to Ranti, by regulating that music may only be distributed through provisions can only be carried out by major companies, this Article prohibits the efficient music distribution practices that are currently carried out by musicians who are not affiliated with major record labels or distributors. “This is cheating,” claims Jason Ranti. Endah Widiastuti of Endah n’ Rhesa comments, “This reference within the Draft Bill shows a clear lack of understanding about what gives life to underground music scenes.”

Third, the Music-making Bill is obtrusive and discriminatory. The section requiring a competency test and certification is a reflection of forced will and has the potential of sanctioning bias against many musicians. Competency testing for musicians does exist in some countries, but it is generally a part of formal education and certainly not compulsory for all musicians. Musician, songwriter, music director, and producer Mondo Gasparo explains, “Existing certification institutions usually do not force musicians, but only offer the choice or option of pursuing certification.” The Article outlining a competency test has the potential to discriminate against self-taught musicians and prevents those who do not pass the test from creating and performing music.

Fourth, the Bill contains nonspecific mandates and regulates things that do not need to be regulated. Some Articles contain unclear language on what is to be regulated and by whom. For example, Articles 11 and 15 contain basic information about how to distribute works—processes that are already well-known and widely practiced by professional musicians to provide audiences with the opportunity to enjoy their works. Both of these Articles lack the substance and clarity required for regulation at the level of Law. Similarly, Article 13 concerning the obligation to use the Indonesian language on labeling is problematic. Musical creation constitutes artistic creation. “Art itself is a language, so the requirement of the Indonesian language for artwork labeling is unnecessary,” explains musician, songwriter, and music director Puti Chitara.

After a thorough review of the Draft Music-making Bill, we have identified numerous incorrect and inappropriate Articles, including Article 4, 5, 7, 10, 11, 12, 13, 15, 18, 19, 20, 21, 31, 32, 33, 42, 49, 50, and 51. The numerous errors reflect a lack of understanding by the drafters of Bill on the nature of professional music-making, the potential for creative diversity, and the real challenges that exist in the world of music-making. “In other words, the many Articles that regulate things that do not need to be regulated indicate that the Music-making Bill is unnecessary,” states Arian 13 of the band Seringai.

“Based on the Bill’s goals, it is clear on which side we must stand: We must maintain the freedom of expression, freedom to create, and freedom to produce culture so that we can continue to reap the many economic benefits generated by creative workers,” adds Gascaro. Therefore, the proposed bill must be retracted.

Let us be free to express ourselves, and free to make music!
